Why Vitrified Porcelain?

Porcelain china is more commonly known as fine china. Derived from white kaolin clay, it remains white after firing in a kiln. Porcelain becomes impervious or vitrified in the glazing process, having the surface made shiny and nonporous by fusing a vitreous solution to it. Ovenware and stoneware are not vitrified, and thus have tiny holes over their surface, making them prone to collecting water, bacteria, and stains. This is not only unacceptable in commercial applications, but allows ovenware and stoneware to fall apart over time. Hard vitreous china, beautifully strong and lustrous, is the perfect resilient medium for food service. MayfairUSA porcelain is twice-fired for increased durability, and produced without animal bone, ash, lead or cadmium.

- ◆ Provide a minimum of 4 pieces of each item you want to have printed or produced.

For additional information regarding design consultation, delivery information, minimum order requirements, and custom sample request forms, please contact your MayfairUSA representative.

■ ■ ■ HANDLING & CARE OF MAYFAIRUSA PORCELAIN & FLATWARE

In order to protect your porcelain from damage please use the following guidelines:

- Do not dump porcelain items off service trays or bus pans into dish washing service area.
- Do not stack items that are not designed to do so, place silverware between items, overload bus containers or place heavier items on lighter items.
- Always scrape and rack soiled china immediately after use. If needed presoak dishes in hot water less than 160 F.
- Prevent china contact with a direct flame and avoid any sudden temperature changes such as putting a hot plate into cool wash water.
- Never use metal utensils, steel scouring pads or other porcelain to scrape dishes, instead use rubber or plastic scrapers or a wet cloth.
- Load dish racks carefully, utilizing solid plastic racks for washing and storage, not plastic coated metal racks.
- Only detergents designed for food service in recommended concentrations should be utilized. Check cycle times, temperatures, water pressure, and water conditions to ensure proper cleaning. Your dealer can assist you with this.
- Low temp machines that require harsh chemicals/sanitizers are not recommended for flatware that is not stainless quality of 18/8 to 18/10 (this term means stainless of 18% chrome and 8 or 10% nickel).
